JANAUSCHEK To-NIGHT .- Janauschek, the queen of tragedy of the American stage, commences a brief engagement at the Thea tre to-right, and will appear in the great historic .. tragedy Earl of Essex. In the first act, as the play runs, Lord

Burleigh, representing the enemies of the Earl of Essex, informs Elizabeth that Essex has been guilty of felony as Viceroy of Ireters, finds comfort in the declaration of Lady Rutland, who, upon being interrogated, pronounces in favor of the innocence of just returned, is introduced to us as the ger that threatens bim, and indifferent to the warnings that are poured into his ears. At this juncture we learn that he and Lady Rutland are man and wife. The scene changes; Elizabeth is stunned by the information that Essex is in London. She is in council with her ministers, and is pressed and harassed by them, when Essex is announced. Robert kneels to the Queen, while she, refusing him recognition, addresses her ministers, reciting the charges they have preferred against Essex, and promising justice. She retires without appearing to know that Essex had been in her presence. This leaves Essex face to face with his accusers, and affords him a splendid scene. In the beginning of the third act we find Elizabeth in a room in her castle, tairly shut in from the daylight, and brooding over her love for Robert and his violation of her express commands. She has banished him from the court and robbed him of his power. In rapid succession she has scenes with Sir James Rolfe, her confidential attendant, with Lady Rutland, whom she suspects as cherishing a love for Essex, and with Jonathan, the old steward of Essex, From Jonathan she learns accidentally that a woman had been conveyed in a Sedan chair into the Essex house the night before, whereas she had been informed that King James, of Scotland, was the person who had been smuggled in. She has ordered Essex into her presence; her ministers hear of it they are bewilderingly clamorous against it but he comes, and then follows a terrific scene in which Elizabeth and Essex are the principal characters. But we need not give a further outline of this tragedy. The play-goers of Richmond are already familiar with the splendid acting of this great tragedienne. A treat is in store for all who may be present. THE HUMPTY DUMPTY TROUPE. - This troupe is said to be one of the best ever organized in America, with the inimitable George Fox in the lead. The company appear at the Richmond Theatre Thursday evening. For fourteen hundred nights this the most amusing of all pantomimes held the boards of the Olympic, in New York, and delighted audiences were present every night. The troupe will remain in this city three days, and the pantomime will be produced in the same manner as it was represented in New York.

Robert Mahoney, sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years for house-burning and highway robbery, and Andrew Leech, waiting trial for burglary; Augustus Hampton, indicted for highway robbery, and Arthur Cavanaugh, held for assault and battery, all escaped and went off. Five hundred jurors have been summoned to appear Monday in the Brooklyn City Court in the civil suit of Tilton against Beecher. Subpenas were being served on witnesses to-day, and the counsel on both sides were active in preparing for the trial. There is a small pamphlet containing a resumé of the great scandal, and entitled

"Crime in High Places," being distributed. It is mostly made up from documents already published, and is not favorable to the Beecher side. Advices by mail of the loss on the south ern coast of Cuba of the steamer Thomas Brooks, before reported, state that she struck on a rock about fifteen miles from Guante name on the morning of the 3d ultimo.
